Chris in trouble

It was Monday afternoon. School was over. Most of the students and teachers had gone home. Chris Jones sat on the wall of the teachers' car park. He was a tall, thin boy with dark brown hair. Two girls from his class sat next to Chris. They were talking and laughing loudly. Chris tried not to look at them. He watched some boys kick a football across the car park. There were only three cars in the car park: a small white one, a small red one and a big dark green one. Sometimes the ball hit one of the teachers' cars. Every time that happened, the girls laughed louder.

The ball hit the red car.

'Hit that one again,' Chris called. 'It's Mr Smith's car. I don't like him.'

'Kick the ball! Hit the car!' called one of the boys.

All the boys started calling, 'Kick the ball! Hit the car!'

The boy with the ball kicked it hard towards the red car. It hit the car. Chris heard a classroom window open. An angry voice shouted, 'Stop that!' Chris looked up at the window. A man was looking down at the students. He was wearing a white coat.

Chris picked up the football. He kicked it. The football flew through the air. It just missed the green car and hit one of the windows in the classroom. The window broke. The girls stopped laughing.

'That's the science room window,' Chris said. 'We're in trouble now.' He jumped off the wall.

'Let's go!' said one of the boys. He ran out of the car park into the street.

'Run!' shouted another boy. All the boys who were kicking the football started to run away.
